Atwood Magazine recently premiered a new song from The Isle Of Ailynn titled, "Unkno", calling it "a gorgeously cryptic song of separation, distance, and the universality of all things. Hauntingly sweet and sonically enriching, 'Unkno' reaffirms Mapped Of's ear for mesmerizing indie folk tapestries." Atwood goes further to say, "Mapped Of stunned listeners with his debut album two years ago, but the artist's quest to bring breathtaking musicality to the fore had only just begun." For further insight, view the extensive feature HERE.

The Isle Of Ailynn is the captivating sophomore release from Mapped Of, aka Tom Meikle, a gifted multi-instrumentalist and composer. Inspired to create outside the realm of modern subject matter, Mapped Of's new collection of songs take the listener on an immersive journey through a fictional world. Full of sweeping melodies and lush arrangements and drawing from classical, electronic, progressive and rock influences, the nine tracks feature narratives that draw parallels to the everyday conflicts, concerns and struggles people deal with. In the end, the common theme remains the humanity that ties us all together. Listen to the recently released track "Ailynn" HERE and read about Meikle's motivation and vision for this tour de force in an essay he penned HERE.

The Isle Of Ailynn further expands on the experimentation and sonic exploration of Mapped's 2017 acclaimed debut A Northern Star, A Perfect Stone, which marked the arrival of an artist who does not adhere to musical boundaries. A Northern Star, A Perfect Stone was well-received by press including Stereogum, Consequence of Sound, Paste, Associated Press and more. NPR Music raved, "Beautiful, finger-picked acoustic guitar and angelic vocals blend into an ethereal, transfixing trip," while The CBC simply noted, "This is special."
